COPING WITH LIFE

Not easy at a time and in an Ireland that has a lot of pressures for a lot of people. During the past week I said the funeral Mass for a 90 year old man at home in Feakle. His wife told me he lived in the same area of the parish all his life and he would never have taken a holiday. He was a farmer, a good athlete, a great family man and had a deep faith. His family, including an indeed especially his grandchildren were broken-hearted with his passing.

The message is – do your best to keep life as simple as you can. That is not easy now with the pressures that come from valuing almost everything in money terms.

The social media world is fast going out of control. It has seriously damaged person to person relationships. Communication, even within families is being undermined. It has got so bad that some parents have introduced strict disciplines as to its use. This is vital.

Maybe we all need to identify how we might simplify life for ourselves. What values are vital for living a genuinely happy life? We need above all to rest the mind; notice all that is good and wonderful all around us and especially develop an ability to listen to others - especially God. He is Present to you - try to be present to Him. He was humble. Its important for us all to try to practise it.
